2. THE OCCUPATION QUESTIONS IN THE SURVEY

The WageIndicator questionnaire has three questions to measure the webvisitor's occupation. The three are listed below.

Question	What is your occupation?
Answer	Here follows the so-called occupation search tree
Question	Do you want to specify your occupation in greater detail?
Answer	Here follows a list that identifies the hierarchical position within an occupation, ranging from assistant to supervisor
Question	If you want to specify your occupation more accurately, please do so here
Answer	Here follows a text box, where the visitor can use up to 254 characters for a description of his/her occupation

3. MEASURING OCCUPATION IN SURVEYS

In written questionnaires, the question about occupation is most commonly asked as either an open text field or as a tick list, using a short aggregated list of occupational groups. For two reasons, the WageIndicator project did not aim for any of the two alternatives. First, an open text field requires recoding afterwards and given the large data-intake, this would imply a tremendous workload. Second, a short aggregated list does not match the web-visitors' behaviour to present detailed information about their occupation. Moreover, the data may not be reliable, as web-visitors may not know how their occupation fits into any of the aggregated categories, introducing aggregation bias.

4. EXPLAINING THE WAGEINDICATOR OCCUPATION SEARCH TREE

Therefore, we decided to offer the web-visitor a choice from a long list of detailed occupational titles, and ask them to tick an occupational title. If they can't find the appropriate title, we ask them to tick the title that comes closest and to use the open text field for specification of the occupational title. For a choice from the long list, we have developed search trees. A search tree is a three-tier tick list from an aggregated list in the first tier to a detailed list in the third tier. Once an item is ticked, the appropriate items of the next tier appear on the screen. The search tree is the only workable solution for gathering detailed information without being restricted to either a huge recoding effort or a limited, aggregated list of items.

The search tree technique in the WageIndicator questionnaire has two features that increase its user-friendliness. First, it allows the web-visitor to go easily back-and-forth in the search tree. Second, in each tier and each language the list of items is sorted alphabetically, allowing for an easy search.

For web-visitors who cannot find their occupation, we decided NOT to use in the search tree an item 'Other occupation, notably,', because this still would require recoding, particularly because we assumed that here web-visitors will use the text box for describing their occupation in enterprise-specific wording. Instead, web-visitors are asked to tick nevertheless an occupational title that comes closest and then use a text field to be more precise about their occupation. We expect to be able to trace 'new' or 'not-listed' occupations here.

5. EXPLAINING THE WAGEINDICATOR OCCUPATION DATABASE

For the WageIndicator occupation search tree, we use an occupation database, which holds more than 5,000 occupational titles in the Master column. Yet, only a part of these 5,000 titles are translated. The International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO) is the basis of the coding of occupations in the occupation database. We used the revised International Standard Classification of Occupations (ISCO88, published by the ILO, 1990), see <http://laborsta.ilo.org/>. ISCO classifies work according to tasks and duties related to an occupation and to relevant skills that are necessary for fulfilling the formal and practical requirements of a particular occupation (ILO, 1990). ISCO is a hierarchical classification and it distinguishes 10 major groups (1-digit), 28 sub-major groups (2-digits), 116 sub-groups (3-digits) and 390 unit groups (4-digits). A unit group consists of a number of occupations that share similar skills and duties, which subdivide into jobs. Each unit group consist of a list of occupations. The search tree presents the 4-digit level unit groups only, and within each unit group it has detailed occupations, totalling more than 5,000 titles.
